

Boston, April 7, 1854.

14, Dix Place.

My Dear Aunt:

132 By a letter just received from bro. George W. Benson, he informs me that you have left your situation at the Carleton House, and are now temporarily boarding with Catharine and himself. My object in writing is to invite you to come immediately to Boston, and to make my home yours as long as it may be agreeable to you; for while I have a place to shelter my own head, or a crust of bread to eat, you shall share it with me. You know that I have expressed to you the desire that you would stay with us, any time it might prove unpleasant or undesirable for you to remain where you have been living; and now that you have left, I renew the invitation, and beg you not to hesitate to come at once to my house. You can take the morning train, by the way of New Haven and Springfield, and be in Boston before tea-time. I will be at the depot on your arrival, if you will apprise me of the time of your coming. - My house is 14 Dix Place, in Washington Street.

I am glad to hear that you are somewhat improved in health, and trust the coming warm weather will fully restore you. It is also gratifying to hear that dear George is better, and is soon to remove to better quarters in Williamsburgh. May you both long live to experience much happiness below.

Yours, with much sympathy and love,
Wm. Lloyd Garrison.
